This course is to broaden students' horizon in operations research by means of inviting speakers to give talks covering a variety of topics in operations research. The class will be held in a seminar form and the attendance is mandatory.

Grading:

You are allowed at most three absences in the whole semester and no documents are needed to justify the absence. More than three absences, a "F" grade will be assigned. In addition, you are required to select a topic related with operations research, study the literature and make a final presentation. The materials of the presentation should be based on the literature. Failure to deliver the presentation will also result in a "F" in the final grade.

If you satisfy both the attendance and final presentation requirement, your final grade will be assigned according to the performance of the final presentation, the class participation, and the interactions with speakers. The final presentation is around 20 minutes and the presentation slides are required to submit to the class account one week ago, which will be announced later.
